John died a few months later. Sarah was heartbroken. She didn't know how she was going to go on without him. She felt lost and alone.

Sarah began to withdraw from the world. She stopped going out and seeing her friends. She spent her days at home, alone with her grief.

One day, Sarah decided to start writing about her experiences. She wrote about her love for John, her grief over his death, and her struggles to move on.

Sarah's writing was cathartic. It helped her to process her grief and to begin to heal.

Afternoons with the Blinds Drawn is a beautifully written and deeply moving book. It is a story of love, loss, and grief. But it is also a story of hope and healing.
